A DOLLAR OR SO.

Our Tom is an excellent fellow,
Gay, witty, handsome and free;
In field or in cloister a marvel—
A notable Creighton is he.

But one deplorable failing,
It causes us deepest regret,
For among Tom's various talents
He's a talent for getting in debt.

We'd forgive him his bills at the tradesmen,
His dread of some people we meet,
The fact, when he goes to the boat-house,
He can go by only one street;

But he borrows from every acquaintance—
He wants it for "only to-day"—
Some insignificant trifle
They never would ask him to pay.

And Tom's such a high-minded fellow,
He thinks not of matters so low,
And—all of his friends are the victims
Of "Lend me a dollar or so."

Refer, how'er gently, to payment—
You're so overwhelmed with his grief
That you'd lend him your utmost quarter
To give the poor fellow relief.

But again in a week he returneth,
"To trip the fantastic I go;"
"My dress coat is down at my uncle's;"
"Please lend me only a dollar or so;"

If he dies in the world's estimation,
The cause let this epitaph show;
He was generous, handsome and brilliant;
But he died of a dollar or so.

FOOT-BALL AGAIN.

Last Saturday (12th inst.) a considerable portion of the Junior and Sophomore classes united in a number of games of foot-ball. The evident pleasure with which they played, and the well-known benefits which arise from the game, lead us again to call the attention of the college to this subject. Beside the facts already mentioned, and which will be admitted by all, that it develops accuracy of eye! gives us nerve and agility, and is suited to a large number of players, foot-ball is worthy our attention for its inexpensiveness, a consideration of great importance to many.

After buying a good foot-ball, and hiring ground on which to play, there are few expenses, and even these are very trivial when divided properly.

Then the foot-ball ground is an excellent place for learning to govern temper. There are few of us who have not witnessed very unbecoming displays of irritation, to say the least, and of which the exhibitors were heartily ashamed when it was too late.

This leads us to say that, perhaps, if there were a well-known and authorized code of rules for the game by which all disputes might be settled, there would be less opportunity for disagreement and quarrels than we now find. There is a great diversity of ways for playing it, and the way we have here is different from all others.

This renders a new code of rules necessary. None of the different codes in use in England would suit us. We must have one entirely our own. It seems to us that we could get one best by calling a university meeting, and having a committee elected to draw up a code to suit our needs. When it was completed, it could be published in The Record. Thus it would come to the hands of all collegians, and there could be no longer any chance for dispute.

Who will propose such a meeting?
DE BALNEIS THEOLOGICIS.

Mr. Editor.—It is with feelings of reluctance that I make known my cause through the public press, feeling that it will necessarily draw me into a discussion which ill accords with my peaceful and retiring disposition. But feeling that I have been injured, my resentment overcomes my diffidence, and I record the facts regardless of consequence. This evening, appreciating the need of a bath, and feeling it my duty (having been brought up in the way I should go) to follow out the Bible injunction, “Wash and be clean,” I wended my way over to that noble structure ycleped the Theological School; I paced directly through the sounding corridors and marble halls, turning neither to the right nor left, and soon reached the object of my dreams. Everything was arranged in the most approved style, and as I shut the door and turned on the hot water, I said to myself, it is good to be a theologian. I then began to take off my shoes, and in order to appear as much like an incipient minister as possible, I lifted up my voice and chanted the sweet strains of “I’m a pilgrim and I’m a stranger.” As I sat on the edge of the tub and sang that good old hymn, my heart became warmed up within me, and as I reflected on the superior accommodations of Divinity Hall and the cushioned seats of Marquand chapel, I almost resolved to study for the ministry myself. But here, Mr. Editor, occurred an intrusion, which has perhaps changed the whole tenor of my life. My songs were interrupted, and my thoughts suddenly recalled to earthly things by a tapping at the bath-room door. Of course I answered “come in,” expecting that some one wished to borrow a match, piece of soap, or some other necessary. When the door opened, however, I saw it was the janitor of the institution, and told him that I had not finished, but would resign in his favor if he would wait ten or fifteen minutes. Yet this did not seem to please him, for with stern face he asked, “For whom I supposed those baths were instituted?” and when I replied that they were for the “great unclean,” his sternness verged on anger. He even endeavored to tell me I had committed a grievous sin, and hinted at policemen and grated cells. It was all in vain that I appealed to his feelings. I told him if he was blessed who gave a man a cup of cold water, how much more would that institution be blessed which gave a man a hot water bath. I endeavored to impress on his mind the beauties of communism, of laying open the good points of each department to the whole University. Instead of becoming converted, however, he grew all the more obstinate, so that I was obliged to use another argument, and I told him that it was a poor rule that would not work both ways, and that if Theologues attended the Senior lectures they ought to be willing to repay us with an occasional bath at least. I at length became angry myself with the man, and accused him of inhospitality, and quoted from the Good Book, how in those olden days they were accustomed to bathe a stranger’s feet when he stopped by the way, and here he, instead of offering his own services, forbade my doing for myself what he ought to have done. This seemed to bring matters to a crisis, and he departed threatening to call on his body guard and put me out. Of course I answered “come in,” expecting that someone wished to borrow a match, piece of soap, or something else necessary. When the door opened, however, I saw it was the janitor of the institution, and told him that I had not finished, but would resign in his favor if he would wait ten or fifteen minutes. Yet this did not seem to please him, for with stern face he asked, “For whom I

Duration of game, 2 hours and 45 min.

The game last Saturday between '74 and '76 was uninteresting from the fact that it was altogether too one-sided. The Juniors were considerably weakened by the sickness of Maxwell and Nevin, but even with this loss they showed themselves far too strong for their opponents, as the appended score will show. The chilliness of the weather was detrimental to fine playing in the field, but seemed to have an opposite effect upon the batting. We noticed that the Freshmen had a plucky catcher, and that several other positions were played with credit, but they did not play together as well as they ought, and showed that practice was sadly needed.

TIME RECORD.

The game between '73 and S. S. S. nines was the shortest of the season, and was marked by no very good plays. Rogers, however, of S. S. S., took a running fly in left field in good style, and Bennett, '73, held firmly a few foul flies. The fielding of the Scientific S. S. and 1st base man was also noticeable. At the bat Daniels, '73, and Elliot, S. S. S., rather took the lead. In the ninth inning '73's pitcher changed his delivery until it approached an underhand throw. Still it was allowed by the umpire, and proved very efficient in bothering the batsmen.

The score was as follows:

The 150,000 dollar Sage Dormitory at Cornell is almost finished. We are informed that Mr. Sage offered to build a similar dormitory for Yale on condition that it would admit ladies, and on its refusal he offered it to Cornell. Can this have any connection with Cornell's new policy on the woman question?
THE FALL REGATTA.

The boating men of college seem determined not to be discouraged by ill success. The preparations for to-day's regatta are more thorough than in years past. The race for the Southworth cup will, no doubt, be a fine one. The contestants, Swift, Smith and Weeks, are in careful training. Whilst we regret, for the sake of boating, that there are not more entries; yet the fact that there are so few will lessen the chances of accidents and increase the interest in the race. Swift is spoken of as the favorite. He certainly has less faults in style than the others. He reaches well, catches quickly, and pulls the oar through the water with vim. His worst fault is going back too far, thus throwing his bow under water and losing time and power. He seems to have avoided one error which nearly every oarsman in college falls into, that is, finishing the stroke in the air. It is easier than pulling it clear through in the water, and because it is easier, many unconsciously fall into it. Smith is very deficient in his reach, especially since he adopted the sliding seat, and he does not sit his boat as steadily, nor use his back and legs as well as is desirable. However, from his plucky actions a year ago, we are assured that the man must work who beats him. Weeks has improved on his rowing of last year, and physically is much the superior of either of his contestants, but has more faults of style than they; yet strength coupled with will may overcome deficiencies in this respect.

One criticism will apply more or less to every crew on the lake; none of them row accurately together, nor finish in the water. This is in part owing to their short preparation, but chiefly to carelessness; and for years these have been the worst faults in the style of our University crews. The Juniors have their new shell, and their improvement in rowing has been very rapid. Their style is very different from that of the other crews. They row a long sweeping stroke, about 39 to the minute, and are pulling better together than the Seniors. They are inclined to pull crookedly in the boat, some of them swinging out very badly, and, if anything, going back too far. We are glad to see that they are not so particular about the bodies swinging together, as we are of the opinion that what it adds to appearance it takes from the efficiency of the pulling, for no two men naturally do their work the same way. Rumor justly makes '74 the favorites.

The Seniors have introduced the sliding seats, but by no means have they overcome the great difficulty of using them together. We also notice that after a mile or so, some are using them while others are pulling with the back and arms alone. We can not say that the Seniors gain anything by their adoption, yet, for the sake of boating, we are glad to see them tested. Here especially is seen the fault of finishing in the air, and the failure to catch and finish together.

There are four entries for the barge race, and the crews are unusually good, so that this, instead of being a stupid prelude to the regatta, will be an interesting feature. The races will undoubtedly be close, and the times made can be compared with that of years to come, as the course has been reliably measured. To those interested in the success of boating next summer, this regatta will have especial interest.

The Juniors are developing the material now which should have been brought out in their Freshman year, and used ere this in the University. From the late decision of a meeting held at Harvard against opening the crew to the whole university, we may as well make up our minds to rely on the classical department for our crew; and let us not be caught in the same situation as last year, with but one class in that department having any degree of development. Each class owes it to college to bring out fully its boating material, and our captain can then lay his hands on six good men who are ready for use.

ALUMNI BADGES.

The subject which I wish to bring before the college, and more especially before the Seniors, may very likely be considered trivial by a large number of students, and had I not heard many approvals of the proposition from classmates, I should not have ventured alone to agitate it.

Most of us have experienced the pleasure one Yale man feels in meeting another when both are far away from the college, and the easy manner in which the barrier of class feeling is broken down, although it is almost insurmountable when at New Haven. In short, it is impossible to deny that Yale and the various topics connected with her form a bond of common interest between her students which few other combinations of men possess.

Of course this interest is greatly increased among the alumni. One can imagine how eagerly one of this latter class would seek for the latest news concerning his alma mater on meeting a man whom he had recognized for a Yale graduate; how they would compare reminiscences of the jolly old times when, with the world before them, they strove to pass away the time as pleasantly as possible, free from almost all the care which after life brings.

On this account I say that all means, however trivial they may seem, which have the fostering of this kindly feeling in view, should be encouraged, and it has seemed to many that an alumni badge would be of great assistance in attaining this result.

I am aware that Yale has the reputation of rather rushing badges and society pins; I have seen embryo Sophs with at least four on their vests; but among so many one more will make but little difference, especially as there will be a meaning attached to them somewhat above class-supper, or campaign committee pins.

Let this subject be brought up at our next class meeting, and there can be no doubt but that it will receive approval.

THE following is the score of last Saturday's Yacht Race on the harbor. The course was from the dock to Luddington Rock buoy and return. Six minutes handicap gave the "Maria" the victory.

EXCHANGE ITEMS.

"College Journalism" is going the rounds of our exchanges just now.

The students at Racine College celebrate the anniversary of the Warden's birth-day.

An oration, delivered at Amherst Public Rhetorical, setting forth the advantages of Gen. Grant's re-election, was received with favor by the students.

The Era reprints the DeForest oration delivered by President A. D. White, of Cornell, in 1873. The subject is, "The Diplomatic History of Modern Times."

The Cincinnati Commercial says that the most remarkable imitation of Lord Byron by Joaquin Miller was the least intentional, namely, his marrying a blue-stocking.
The College Herald produces an extract of a letter written by William Cullen Bryant to prove that the declaiming of "Thanatopsis" was not the cause of the latter's leaving Williams College. The low grade of scholarship at Williams was the primary cause of the poet's departure.

We clip the following from the Congregationalist's report of the recent invasion of missionaries:

"You missed a great deal," one told us, "by not attending prayers at the College Chapel. The galleries were crowded with visitors each morning, and every seat on the floor was filled by the students. The exercises were of peculiar interest, though the solemnity of the impression made was somewhat impaired by a downward glance past the reverently bowed heads of the students, which revealed the fact that some were intently coming deferred lessons."

The Argus contains an account of the "Last Yale Rush." Among other characteristic sentiments, it has this one: "Yes, indeed, Wesleyan can say with pride that no such affair as this defiles her campus or Middletown's fair parks." It also contains an article on Sophomore Societies, in which the principle of deferring pledges until Sophomore year is strenuously advocated. In the course of the discussion the Argus "blushes" at the bare idea that any agreement made by the societies among themselves would not be kept. It is noticeable as a college idiosyncracy that the "season of campaign" in Yale phraseology is the "period of cultivation" in that of Wesleyan.

It will be of interest to '74 and '75 to hear that Mr. J. V. McDonald, Jr., formerly aspirant for membership to each of his classes, has been actively engaged as a "Grant orator" in the presidential campaign. The Beaver Conservative contains one of his speeches in full, which was also republished by the Pittsburg Commercial. The Conservative says:

"John McDonald, Jr., son of Capt. John V. McDonald, received the clubs (Grant Guards) in a neat address, which we publish below, and which was listened to with marked attention and frequently applauded." And in conclusion says: "Everybody was well pleased with this, the first effort of our young friend, John McDonald, Jr., and predict for him a bright future."

A football game with Harvard is being discussed, but no definite action has as yet been taken.

The Glee Club have had applications to sing at Bloomfield, Orange, Montclair and Farmington.

The first Senior reception takes place Monday evening, the 21st.

We hear that a Senior is studying Sanskrit with a young lady of this city.

The lad Osborn, whose fall from the trapeze we noticed some time since, has almost recovered.

We are requested to state that all white beavers will be "called in" after the 16th.

The Theologues now rejoice in free tickets to Gough's lecture.

'75 is setting a good example to the rest of the college in the matter of singing on the fence.

Another fall of plastering in the north entry of Farnam. One Junior injured.

Shields, formerly of '74 and '75, was last seen in St. Louis.

The Freshmen began to attend lectures in Physiology last Monday morning.

Hart W. Lyman, '75, will preach the Thanksgiving sermon in the Jubilee.

The Jubilee Committee are busy just now in collecting subscriptions from everybody. It is hoped that all will respond liberally.

Prof. Wier of the Art School will deliver a lecture in Brooklyn some time during the winter on "The Principles and Means of Art."

A number of "graduates of '69" are so much "interested in" The Record as to send us their subscriptions.

The Yale Missionary Society has been revived. H. B. Frisell, '73, was elected Pres.; S. C. Bushnell, '74, Sec.; W. H. Jordan, '75, Treas.

The Lit. comes out this afternoon at 7 o'clock. Subscribers can get their copies at Hoadley's. There will be sixty-six pages in this month's issue.

Two Seniors, weary of the fare in New Haven, went to New York last Monday, dined at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and returned in the evening.

Derivative ending. "-tor and -trix denote agent."

With -tor you form the masculine and you get the female by -trix.

One of the Seniors has had a pair of winter shoes built which measure four and a half inches across the soles.

Sigma Eps places a huge bag of peanuts upon our table, and we take back all we said about their bum. We wait to hear from Delta Kap.

An Amherst man who was in town last week, says that public opinion points to the Dartmouth, as "the coming crew."

Hannibal was overheard trying to rope two old A. B. C. F. M.s into buying some caroms, on the ground that he "wanted to pay his pew rent."

A prize has been offered at Harvard for a race between the university crew and one picked from the graduates residing in Boston.

The report that the Lit. editors have been looking over the excuse papers for a prize story, is wholly without truth.
A Junior deacon lately had a pair of ladies' shoes left at his door. We remind him of the law forbidding the marriage of undergraduate students, and warn him that further deception will be useless.

Students who go to the race with ladies are reminded that the "Eagle's Nest," which can be reached by a road leading up the left bank, commands the best view of the course.

The billiard tournament which has been agitating the Sophomores was concluded last Thursday evening, and the champion cue awarded. At his request we omit the name of the recipient.

Maxwell, '74, having recovered from his attack of typhoid, has returned to his home. We regret to say that there is a prospect of his not returning, and the nine will thus lose its pitcher.

The shell crews row about 38 or 39 strokes to the minute. The barge crews about 40. The Senior shell crew is so unfortunate as to have only rowed where blacks and whites would be slightly injured. The others escaped unhurt.

The colored people have been enjoying themselves for the past few days in a bush-meeting at Hamden. One of the speakers described heaven as a place where blacks and whites would be "on a level perpendicular."

We clip from the Palladium's "Colonial Records, 1717-1775." The Assembly ordered "that what shall be gained by the impost on rum for two years next coming shall be applied to the building of a rector's house for Yale College."

The Saltonstall course was surveyed during the week by Mr. Searles, the city surveyor, and it will now be permanently marked by posts on both banks.

The triangulation was very difficult on account of the shape of the course.

Mr. Elder has received a letter from the President of the Dartmouth Boat Club, stating that they wanted a lap-stroke and not a shell, and in consequence have decided not to buy the shell of the class of '75.

As two of the contestants in the single scull race were returning from the Lake in a buggy last Saturday, with Prof. Dole, their horse took fright at a locomotive, upset the buggy, and Prof. Dole was slightly injured. The others escaped unhurt.

Some unknown person, but probably one of the small boys who infest the Gymnasium, cut one of the ropes on the swing half through, and a Junior who fell from it narrowly escaped severe injury. Query —does this come within the limits of a practical joke?

Prof. Day of the Theological School has been chosen corresponding secretary of the American Committee on the Revision of English Scriptures. Ex-Pres. Woolsey is chairman of the New Testament company, of which Prof. Hadley is a member. Prof. Day is also a member of the Old Testament company. Yale cannot complain of being unrepresented in this great work, at all events.

The first page of the "Miscellany" in the Banner has at its top the picture of the bandy-legged patron of the Lit., and directly under him the name of the chairman of its board of editors. This is very suggestive to Freshmen at least, for one of them was overheard to say, "Well, I swear, that's Prentice, is it? Why I saw his picture over at Alumni Hall."

The compiler of the Pot Pourri expects to get it out in a few days, and perhaps as early as the 19th. Some errors in the directory and in the different lists of committees will be corrected. It will differ from the Banner chiefly in having fewer advertisements, and some of them from out of town firms, and in the condensed memorabilia, which will be made unusually full and therefore unusually useful.

S. S. S. NOTES.

A Scientific Glee Club has been formed, and includes at present the following names: Brown, Gause, Scaife, Sellers and C. T. Smith, of '73; Childs, Howe, Pratt and Torrance, of '74. They have placed themselves under the direction of Prof. Wheeler.

'75 presented a razor worth 60 cents to a member of the class to enable him to cut his first crop of "Habit." The following is a list of the speakers as announced, the subjects being as yet undetermined:
