Announcing Yale Journal of Music & Religion Translations

The Yale Journal of Music & Religion is pleased to launch a new initiative—Yale Journal of Music & Religion Translations. We invite proposals to publish English translations of primary sources, scholarship, essays, and commentaries related to the study of sacred music and its ritual, artistic, and cultural worlds. Our goal in publishing translations is to increase access to texts from a broad range religious traditions and discourses that have not been published in English. Projects may be from any language, geographical region, or historical period, and partial translations of larger texts with sections focused on music and sound will be considered. Please reach out to Editor-in-Chief Jeffers Engelhardt (jengelhardt@amherst.edu) with questions and proposals.
