Moody's Lowers Nippon Credit Bank's Senior Debt Rating to Ba1

Moody's
Rating Action: MOODY'S LOWERS NIPPON CREDIT BANK'S SENIOR DEBT RATING TO Ba1

21 Mar 1997

Tokyo, 03-21-97 – Moody's Investors Service lowered the senior debt rating of Nippon Credit Bank (NCB), to Ba1 from Baa3. This concludes a review initiated on February 18, 1997. The bank's Baa3/Prime-3 deposit ratings were not under the review, although the outlook for these deposit ratings remain negative.

In Moody's opinion, NCB's loan portfolio contains substantial unrealized losses; its problem assets represent a significant burden on its weak capitalization and its mediocre earnings outlook. In addition, Moody's expects that the evolution of Japan's financial system will continue to erode the bank's wholesale operating franchise. As indicated in its E financial strength rating, Moody's expects that NCB may ultimately require outside assistance.

Moody's also noted that the resolution methodology for major Japanese banks remains uncertain. Without explicit protection, such as that afforded by the deposit insurance system, certain creditor classes may face greater risks. Particularly, there remains a degree of ambiguity surrounding public policy support for bank debenture holders, that in Moody's opinion, warrants a distinction between deposit and senior debt (i.e., domestic debenture) ratings.

The Nippon Credit Bank, Limited, headquartered in Tokyo, is the smallest of Japan's three long-term credit banks with assets of Yen 16 trillion (U.S.$132 billion) as of September 30, 1996.
