COMING UP

Alumnae Day on Saturday, Feb. 21st.

You will receive a notice with all the details, but the theme will be Alumnae-YSN relationships, with speakers in the morning and workshops in the afternoon. Do plan to come.

FLORENCE SCHORSKE MADE FULL DEAN

The Yale Corporation has voted to appoint Acting Dean Florence Schorske as Dean of the School of Nursing for a two year period, beginning July 1, 1959.

ALUMNAE ASSOCIATION EXECUTIVE SECRETARY RESIGNS - MISS PARSONS APPOINTED

Mrs. Elizabeth Simmons '29 is resigning as Executive Secretary of the Alumnae Association on February 1st. For eight years Betty has tried to keep in touch with all of you, and we who have known and worked with her will miss her very much.

The new Executive Secretary will be Miss Esther Parsons who since 1946, has been in charge of Sterling Dormitory. The Alumnae Association is fortunate in being able to obtain a new Executive Secretary who has a keen interest in the School and knows all the more recent graduates.

REGIONAL MEETINGS

New Haven, New York City and Boston have held regional meetings this Fall. The Alumnae Association Office has compiled regional lists of alumnae and will send copies to alumnae interested in arranging meetings in their area. The School and Faculty will gladly assist in any way possible.

THE 1958-59 STUDENTS

This year the School has an enrollment of nineteen. Fifteen are new students while four students in the Mental Health and Psychiatric Nursing major have returned for their third term. They came from the U.S., Canada, Belgium and the Philippines. Enrolled in the Maternal and Newborn Health Nursing major is Margaret Field, '48.

YSN AUTHORS

Have you noticed that a number of alumnae have had articles in nursing journals this Fall? Virginia Brantl '51, Drusilla Poole '47, Agnes Bowe '35, and Mary Stone Brodish '37 all have written articles for the AJN or Nursing Outlook.

NEED A NEW CAP?

Bruck's Nurses Outfitters Co. of 387 Fourth Ave., New York 16, will continue to supply Yale caps at 90 cents a piece. The Alumnae Association has blue ribbon for 35 cents plus postage.

THE MONEY SITUATION

Since last April, 667 Alumnae, or slightly more than 50%, have paid their Alumnae Association dues. The Annie W. Goodrich Fund now totals $96,223, tantalizingly near our immediate goal of $100,000.

Miss Laura Grant, Director of Nursing at New Haven Hospital for many years, died in Nov. 1958 in California.

Miss Elizabeth Fox, former director of the V.N.A., died in Nov. as she was about to receive the 1958 C.-E.A. Winslow Award for distinguished service in public health nursing in Connecticut.
I had never thought much about the "new program" until an alumna friend told me that another had said she thought it was preposterous. To her it sounded like permissiveness in education to the point of absurdity. A few days later, I saw still a third alumna who told me that from what she had heard, it sounded impossible, but if it were possible, it could be one of the most exciting courses in nursing, she could imagine. In informal scraps of conversation with a few faculty members, I heard such things as, "Now we might be able to approach 'nursing research' in a scientific way"; and, "Students feel like they're just beginning to understand what they want and what they want to do as nurses. The lights are going on all over the place."

I began to wonder what really was "going on" at the "new" YSN. Catalogue descriptions of courses leave a particularly frustrated impression on me, as I personally have never encountered one that seemed to convey the essence of a course once I got into the meat of it as a student. I didn't know any faculty members or students well enough to have heard more than these random superficial remarks interjected into social conversations. As an alumna, I wanted to very much to know what students regard as their significant experiences in the School and why.

Through faculty members who felt that other alumnae might be just as interested, I arranged to meet with a student from each of the three programs and write up what they had to say. I approached them informally with five questions in the back of my mind:

1. What sent them to a graduate nursing program in the first place?
2. What did they expect to find at Yale?
3. What are they finding and how do they feel about it?
4. What do they intend to do with what they learn in the field when graduated?
5. What researches are they being led to for thesis problems and how are they approaching them?

The Obstetric student had upon graduation from a collegiate program worked in a small Midwestern hospital and became more and more dissatisfied with what was expected of her as a graduate nurse. Of all her various duties, the most rewarding to her and closest to her conception of what she wanted to do as a nurse was her work with the mothers in labor. She had always heard that Yale had a wonderful program in Obstetrics for everyone concerned, nurse, M.D. and, not to say the least, mother; so she went about applying with only the notion of learning more about Obstetrics and the support of mothers in labor and then deciding what to do from there on the basis of what she learned.

Her research project was still being planned when we spoke, but it is going to deal in general with helping define the role of the nurse in the family, where the husband is allowed to stay with his wife during labor. The focus of her study will be on the father. She will use a control group where fathers are not allowed to stay to help her in her findings.

The Mental Health Student I saw was a graduate from a four year college and had wanted to enter the Yale basic program, but applied when the decision not to continue it had already been made. She then went to a collegiate nursing school and took only the "nursing part" of their course and worked as a graduate with psychiatric patients. It was on this job that she decided she wanted to do something more creative through nursing. In school and on the job, she had always felt the opportunity was there, but she never seemed to be able to find it.
Her proposed research project deals with the examination of recorded nurse/patient interactions for basic underlying dynamic principles, in the hope of discovering, identifying and defining what it is that nurses, in particular, do in meeting patients' needs.

BASIC UNDERLYING DYNAMIC PRINCIPLES: ...just the sort of expression that to me so easily and surreptitiously conceals a mass of unspecifics. "I like what?" I asked.

"Maybe," she replied, "I'll find in a statistically valid number of cases that the program of care outlined for a patient has nothing to do with what the patient can accept or understands as being beneficial to him. Maybe, I'll find out that the patient needs a lot more encouragement than we ever imagined, to let us know where he is in his thinking about himself and the care we are trying to give him."

"But how will you find this out? These are things that almost all of us have suspected, but never been able to substantiate with more than personal anecdotes for proofs."

"Ah, then the most important element of all comes in. The sharing of information. Now, this sharing should be purposeful and appropriate, not accidental and prying. By this I mean... Well, a few months ago if I walked into a room to perform a routine task and the patient was red, breathing heavily and seemed in distress, I would have said, 'How are you?' or some such thing. If the patient replied, 'Oh, just fine!', I would have finished my business and walked out a little piqued, trying not to show it and thinking, 'Who does she think she's kidding. If she wants anything she can say so, I'm not going to force care on her.' Now, I would share. I'd say, 'Gee, I may be mistaken, but to me you don't look very fine, Are you sure there isn't something I can do.' I've found that I can find a lot more to do for patients by this kind of sharing than I ever imagined before. But, you see, it's purposeful.

The Public Health Student I interviewed, is a graduate of a collegiate program and veteran of four years as a V.N.A. nurse, and a few summer courses at another college. She always had the feeling (vague and undefined again) that there was more she could both give and get through her job, but always felt frustrated because she couldn't even lay a finger on this something, let alone find out how to achieve it. She began to get the glimmerings of what she had been looking for in some summer courses at another college and decided to obtain her Master's.

In her research, she will follow clinic patients who have been given treatments to carry out, to see if they 1) Understand them, 2) Do them, 3) Get helped by them; and if not why. She will use both the hospital clinics and patients' homes for follow-ups.

All of the students mentioned how thrilled they were with their programs and the opportunity to be at Yale. They all felt a bit frightened, but stimulated by the challenge of their research, having at that time just about completed the definition of their problems.

When I saw them, they had just finished the first "block" of the program, in which all the students in the School had experience in the 2 month Nursing Process Course, and the course in Research Methods given by a member of the Sociology Department. They all seemed to me to be serious, eager and hard-working, and I wondered about the criticism...."permissiveness to the point of absurdity." When I asked about this, they all smiled knowingly and went into some details about their experiences as beginning students.
They had all expected the traditional multi-paged bibliography of required reading and the big pull through that to something (the same vague thing) that they would discover at the end. Instead, they were turned loose on the wards (or home) with the least realistically necessary service responsibility, to find out, on the most basic level and in the most immediate way (actual experience), what they were doing, wanted to do and might grow to do in a nursing situation. They did their real "fining out" in the daily conferences with faculty members in which their interactions with patients were analyzed. One said, "Once we got down to the basic interaction we began thinking like never before. We carried everything from the ward and classroom back to the dorm and would be up sometimes 'till 2 or 3 in the morning hashing and rehashing our own and each others' experiences until we were all beginning to make the same kind of sense out of them." Another said, "I finally realized that, though I had enjoyed my patient contacts before to some extent, it was all on a personal basis. I will never be able to function that way again. I know I'll get much more enjoyment now that I've learned to be professional."

This apparent lack of rigid direction seemed to all of the students to have resulted in a clarity of purpose in learning and an enthusiasm for it that they had never known before. One said, "I could spend three years just in the library and never find out all the things I want to know right now." Another said that her instructor had advised a less complex research problem so that it would be easier for her to do, but she felt she wanted to tackle a more difficult one because it would interest her more and she felt that she might only half-do a piece of work which had not originated with her, no matter how much easier it might be.

In our discussion, we barely mentioned the more formal academic courses that they take in the University. I made note of this, and they said that they were certainly useful as background, but their main focus was on their chief interest—nursing and the nursing process. All felt that when they return to work, no matter in what capacity, they will have a much clearer idea of what a nurse can do and how she is able to do it. All were certain that they couldn't help but be more purposeful and professionally conscious in their nursing relationships in the future. I envied them for their opportunity, as well as their zest to learn.
